ESSENTIALLY A STEELHEAD TRIP, BUT FOR REALLY, REALLY BIG RAINBOWS

COME TO FISH

White tablecloths and fancy accommodations-no. Fishing the lodge clock? Absolutely not. The perfect place for an avid angler to swing flies at the biggest and baddest rainbow trout found anywhere in Alaska? Absolutely. Join Kate Watson, Interior Fly Fishing Co. and AK Trout Camp in 2020, amongst the wildest and most pristine settings that Alaska has to offer. The famed Naknek River, along with a multitude of fly-out destinations accessible via floatplane, compile to make this a diverse hosted.

trip we are proud to offer. Giant rainbow trout, brown bears, simplistic riverside accommodations along with hearty, home-cooked meals make this a true Alaskan fly fishing experience. We've been here, we've fished it, the Naknek is the real deal.

This is a small group trip with six ladies, which creates a great space to learn and fish in a comfortable environment

THE FISHING

Each year, solid numbers of giant rainbow trout drop down from Naknek Lake into the Naknek River to feed on salmon eggs, flesh, and sculpin. These fish often exceed the ten-pound mark, looking and behaving very similar to steelhead in the manner that they love to pummel swung flies.

Fishing is often done with 7 and 8-weight spey rods (available at camp, should you not have your own), Skagit-style shooting heads, and 10 to 15 foot sinking tips. Flesh flies, large articulated leeches, as well as sculpin and baitfish patterns are the name of the game on the Naknek. Should anglers choose to, Alaskan-style bead fishing behind spawning sockeye with single-handed rods is highly effective.

What sets AK Trout Camp aside from a majority of operations on the Naknek is their fishing program, which starts before the sun comes up and extends right until sunset with a short break in the middle of the day. Fish will be caught at any time throughout the day, though the early and late hours seem to yield some of the most magical moments imaginable on this large, wide river catering perfectly to a swung fly. Similar to swinging flies for steelhead, though slightly more generous, this is definitely a 'quality over quantity' fishery. Anglers can realistically expect to have 2-5 encounters per day, bringing one or two fish to hand per day is considered a success. Rainbows on the Naknek will regularly exceed thirty inches, and are not easy to land. AK Trout Camp also has a fly-out program (not included in package price, rate depending on location) that offers fishing for Leopard rainbows and Arctic Char.

ITINERARY

01 TRAVEL DAY ONE

Fly to Anchorage, transfer to King Salmon. Travel to lodge by the way of a short drive, followed by a very short boat ride across the river. Set up rods, go over the week ahead.

02 DAY TWO-SIX

Fish, fish, and fish even harder. It is not uncommon, should you choose, to see 9+ hours of fishing on the Naknek. The lodge's motto is "eight to eight with a three hour break" One of the days will be a fly out if we decide we want to.

03 DAY SEVEN

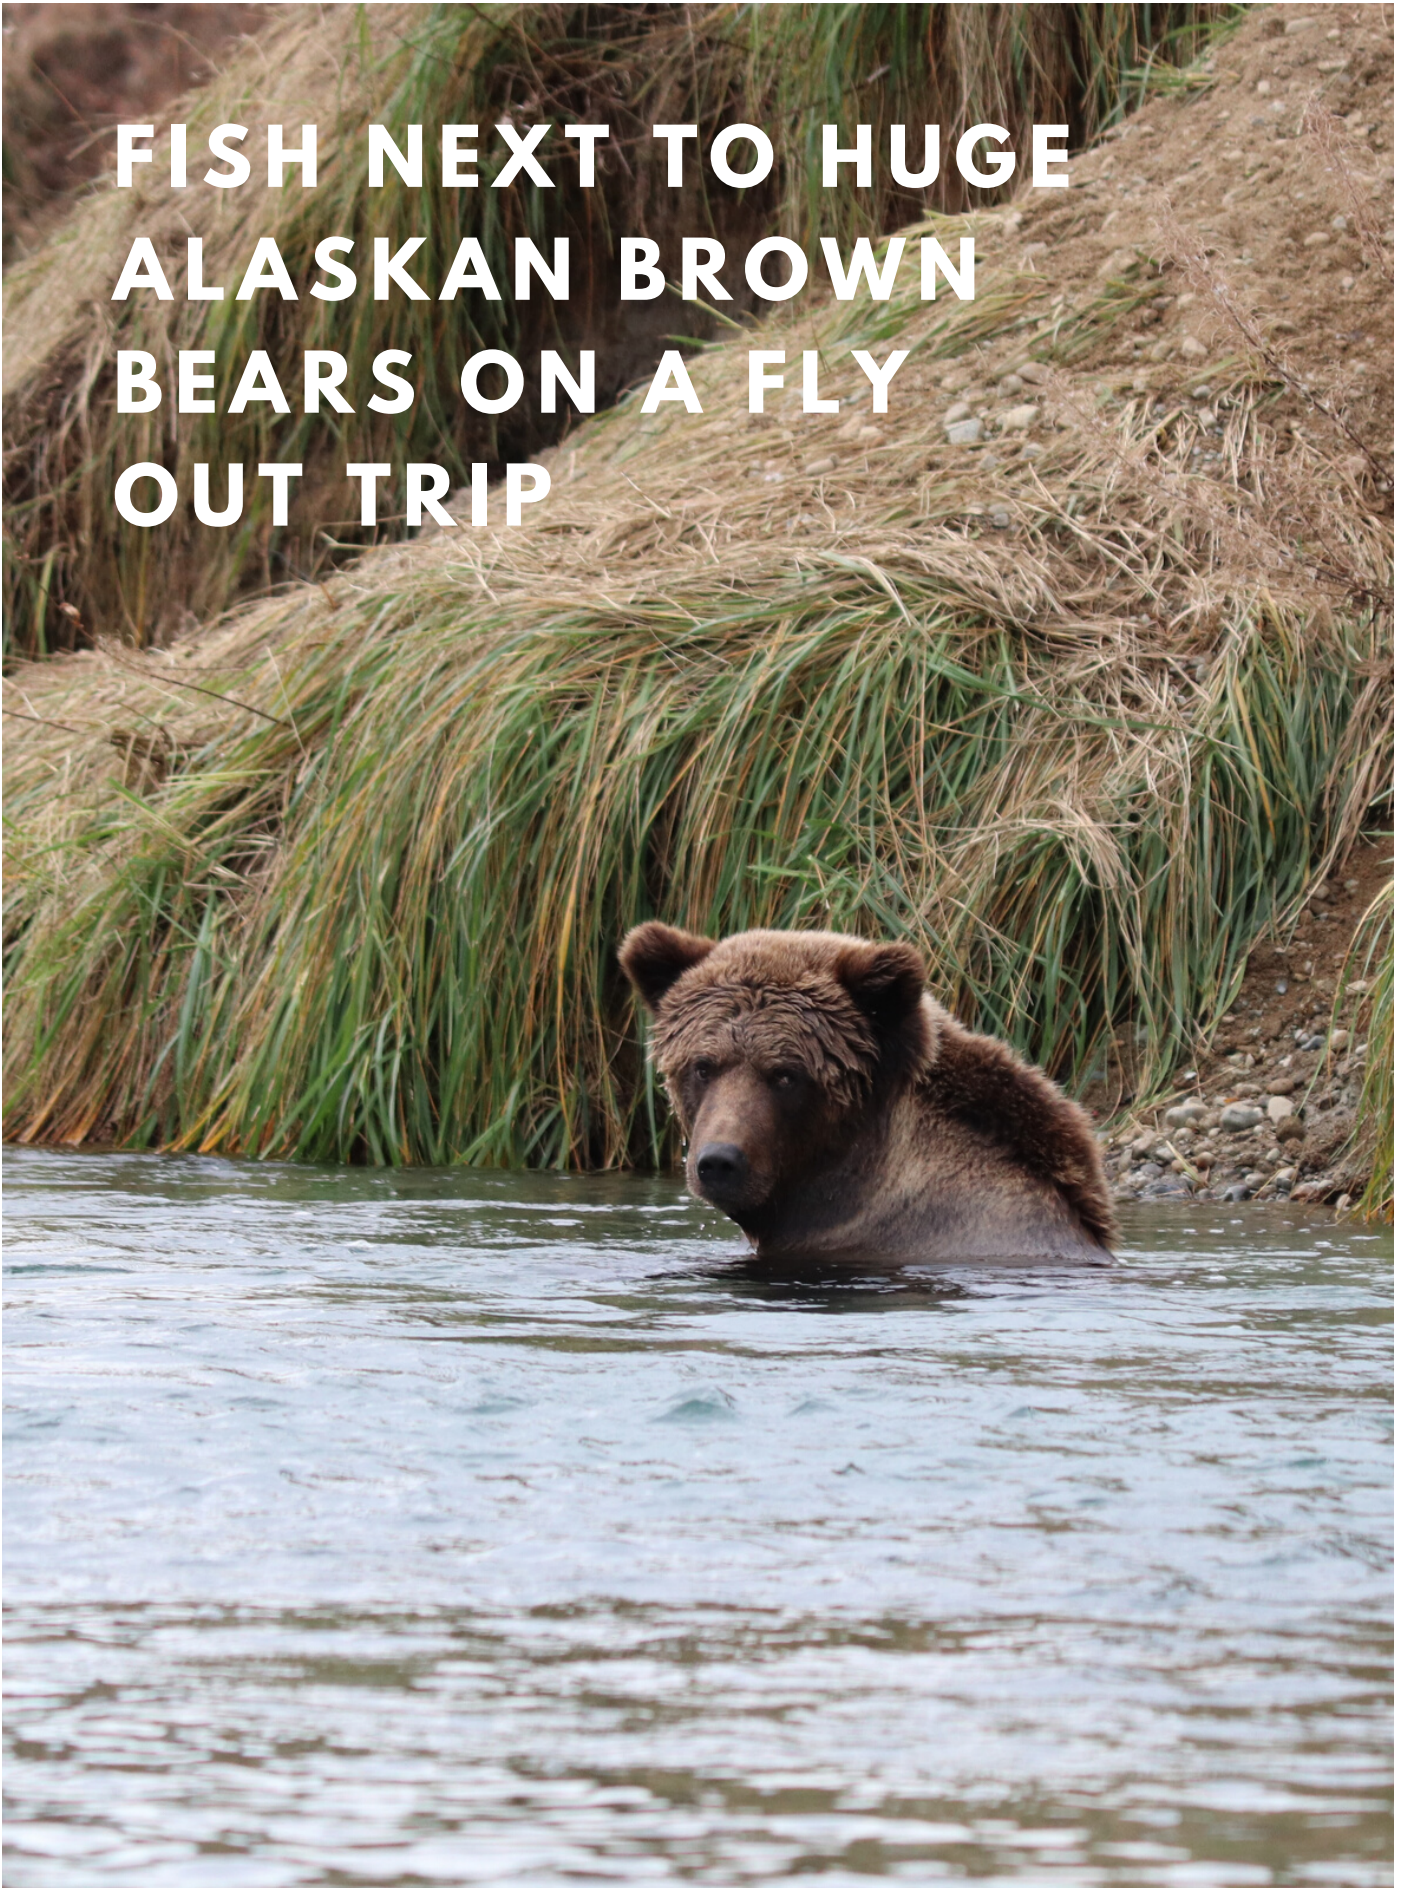

Check out and depart from King Salmon, Alaska.

THE CAMP

Located on the banks of the Naknek, AK Trout Camp is a small operation that caters to small groups of six anglers per week. Rooms are booked on double-occupancy, with each consisting of two beds, a heater, and a shared bathroom (with shower). The rooms are simplistic, but comfortable and offer everything you need. The main lodge is a farmhouse from the 1920s, and filled with character from whale bones, interesting fish mounts, and carvings. The quarters are cozy & clean yet rustic.

Three square meals per day are had in the main building, in which the day is recapped while the following one is planned. A typical breakfast would consist of eggs, hashbrowns, bacon or sausage and pancakes. Hot lunches are often hot soup and a sandwich after a morning of fishing, with dinners being plentiful dishes varying from spaghetti and wild sockeye salmon, to steak or moose burgers.

OUT TRIP

THE FLY OUT

We have the option of doing one fly out which would be an additional cost added to the trip. The fly out consists of taking a float plane 45 minutes to Katmai National Park. We fly over the Southern tundra where you have the opportunity to spot roaming moose and bears from the plane. Once landed, you are dropped off amongst dozens of huge Alaskan Brown Bears feeding on sockeye, sows teaching their cubs to chase salmon and mountain vistas,

It is a hard feeling to describe fishing fifteen to twenty feet away from huge Brown Bears, but prepare to feel emotionally overwhelmed watching these magnificent creatures. We will be targeting bright leopard rainbows with brilliant pinks, greens and dark spots.

Additional Fly Out costs: $734 USD
